Teachers were here Saturday.

There was a teachers institute held in this city on Saturday, on which occasion there were about sixty teachers in attendance at the sessions. The meetings were held at the Wood County Normal and were reported to be very interesting by those who attended. Among those who took part in the program were County Superintendent Geo. A. Varney, Prof. M. H. Jackson, Prof. W. W. Clark, Misses McDermid and Broene.

Preparing to Organize.

The attorneys of Wood county held a meeting in Grand Rapids last Wednesday afternoon and believe us, there was some legal talent represented. The meeting was called to order by Atty. Geo. L. Williams of this city and a committee was appointed to report at a meeting to be held this week, when it is expected that a constitution and set of by-laws will be presented for adoption.

3% vs. ?

When tempted to put the results of your savings, which represent days, weeks and even years of hard labor into some questionable enterprise, remember this: It is better to get three per cent regularly with the PRINCIPAL ALWAYS YOURS, than to get a larger return for a year or two with a possibility of NO PRINCIPAL for the rest of the time.

3 per cent and Safe is a good course to follow—unless you prefer speculation with the chances involved.

BRIDGE FOR RACE SUICIDE

Fort Worth, Tex., Mar. 30.—"Auction bridge and race suicide are cause and effect."

"The hotel child and the cafeteria husband are two of the most pitiful objects in the world," said Jack Johnson, the famous champion of Wisconsin, official lecturer of the American Federation of Women's clubs, said these things to local club women urging "old fashioned homes and babies."

"So-called family hotels and boarding houses, when compared to the home, are like incubators, the mechanical institution of the living reality," declared Miss Stearns. Modern inventions and conveniences that remove from home work much of the tireless drudgery placed upon woman the moral responsibility of making proper use of their spare time, she stated.

Is On Retired List.

Marshall Herald—Lieutenant and Mrs. Art Leach and two sons of Baltimore, Md., were in the city several days last week, leaving Thursday to visit with relatives at Grand Rapids. Lieutenant Leach, who has been in the United States Army for the past two years, has been retired from active service and will go on the pension roll. His retirement is caused by the impairment of his eyesight and hearing presumably caused by gas fire during his service in the navy, where he had been exceptionally honored by a series of promotions since graduation from Annapolis. At Baltimore he will enter a large scale engineering firm.

What Lime Does.

In last week's paper an item by Professor Clark stated that the farmer should use more lime. Of what value is lime? What is sour or acid soil? These questions every farmer should be able to answer but many cannot, therefore I shall attempt to answer them.

Lime has many indirect uses in the soil. If it is used on clay soils, it will make the soil more mellow and friable. After using it there is also less danger that water will gather on the surface. In any kind of soil it helps in the action upon organic matter; but the most important use is to make sour soils sweet.

Sour soils may be caused in many ways, but it is generally caused by the presence of too much organic matter and the lack of phosphates. Where the common soil, rushes and mosses grow abundantly the soil is almost always sour.

The surest way to detect a sour soil is to place some neutral litmus paper in the soil and if after some time it becomes of a reddish color the soil is sour.

Wood county has a large amount of sour soil and the only way that this can be overcome is by applying lime to the soil. Two or three tons of ground limestone, which in most cases proves to be the best, is sufficient for an acre and it costs about five dollars per ton, but after applying the crop is usually doubled. Farmers, why should you let many dollars go to waste? The surest way to detect a sour soil and the only way that this can be overcome is by applying lime to the soil.

NEGRO IS NOW ON THE RETIRED LIST

On Monday J. S. Wilford, the Jackson County, Ore., man, who had been in the world's championship for several years past, and who had decided the title so effectively that no white man has yet won a look in, will stand at the head of the parade from the accounts it was evident that the negro had all the best of it during the last part of the contest, but weakened toward the last and was finally put out of the game.

The new champion is said to be the biggest man that ever stepped into a prize ring, being 6 feet, 6 inches tall, and weighs 250 pounds.

AUCTION SALE!

The usual conditions will govern the sale. Free lunch at noon. Garrett Loomis, auctioneer.

Want "Third Street" Paved.

A petition which is being largely signed, is being circulated among the residents of Third street, for the paving of that thoroughfare. The petition will be presented to the council at its meeting tonight and it is expected that some action will be taken on the matter.

Third street is one of the most residential streets in the city, there being a large number of hand-carriage houses on the street. It is in a poor condition and as there is generally several months in the spring when the street is practically impassable there is no reason why something should not be done to improve it.

The police rounded up a peddler on Saturday that was selling cheap jewelry about the city and upon his being taken before one of the local justices he was fined $2.00 and costs.

The Elks held one of their pleasant dancing parties at their hall on Monday evening. There were about fifty couples in attendance and the evening was spent in a most pleasant manner.

Two boys who had been stealing some brass from the Consolidated plant were rounded up last week by the sheriff. Owing to their tender years they were allowed to go on probation upon promising that they would behave themselves in the future.

C. E. McKee, editor of the Pittsville Record, was a business visitor in the city on Saturday and while here he favored the Tribune office with a pleasant call. Mr. McKee drove over in a new Ford car that he recently purchased, but stated that the road was pretty bad in spots, altho he made the trip in a little over an hour.

Kenneth McCamley of the McCamley & Beachville company has sold four complete touring cars with detachable Plymouth motor this spring, and the fleet only awaits the opening of navigation to start out. The indications are that there will be a large number of power boats on the river this year than ever before.

Many an Elmer hat in Grand Rapids was born to blush unseen, owing to the inclemency of the weather and a coming rain, that kept on from early morning until late at night. It was certainly a dirty Irish trick for the weather man to predict a clear day with rising temperature, and then hand us a steady downpour of rain all day long.

Several stretches of concrete work were let last week, the work having been secured by Fred Bossert, who was the lowest bidder. The work is to be done at Biron, Port Edwards and Nekoma, and will be a continuation of the work done last season. The work at Biron will be extended south to the city limits, and the concrete work at Nekoma will be carried down thru the village.

H. F. Anderson, who has been engaged in the wagon repair and building business in this city for the past ten years, has decided to move to City Point this spring to make his home in the future. Mr. Anderson owns a farm at City Point, and as his health has been poor for some time past he is in hope that the outdoor life incident to operating the farm may prove of benefit. The many friends of the family will be sorry to know of their proposed departure, but will wish them all kinds of success in their new home.

Some months ago Louis Reichel the jeweler installed a wireless telegraph in his store for the purpose of getting the time each day from the government station at Arlington, the latest news from the seat of war, and other things that might prove of interest to Grand Rapids people. However, while the outfit looked nice and seemed to be in first class order, it did not seem to be much of a success as a wireless outfit. In fact it was as quiet as a henpecked husband at a meeting of the weekly sewing circle.

After much experimentation the proper combination was reached, and on Saturday evening for the first time Mr. Reichel succeeded in getting the time from Arlington and since that time has no trouble in hearing distant points at night and everything has moved along in a most happy manner. Upon receiving the time Saturday evening Mr. Reichel found that his regulator and chronometer were a trifle ahead of the government time, but not enough to make much of any difference.

STEVENSON POINT EDITOR DEAD.

Ed Glenon Died in Milwaukee Saturday.

Ed Glenon, the veteran editor of the Stevens Point Gazette, died at Milwaukee, Wis., Saturday, April 4, at the age of 73 years. He had been in Milwaukee for some time, having been taken there by a stroke of paralysis, which he suffered on Friday, March 27, at his home in Stevens Point.

Mr. Glenon was born in Stevens Point in 1842 and had lived in all his life. He attended the common schools and made a living as a newspaper editor and printer. He had a large family, and was a member of the Grand Rapids Lodge, No. 1, I. O. O. F., and the Grand Rapids Chapter, No. 1, R. A. M.

Handkerchiefs Carry Contagion

It is a common practice of mothers and fathers to use their own pocket handkerchiefs to wipe the noses of their young dependents. The practice is by no means limited to common people, but is followed by the educated and the refined as well.

A used pocket handkerchief is a loaded weapon of disease. A new white handkerchief of a consumptive or of the victim of a common cold is a veritable incubator of disease germs. On the other hand, a handkerchief may be rendered free of contact with clean earth or cold dust and be comparatively clean.

Dirtyness and cleanliness are relative terms. To a physician, with his knowledge of the nature and spread of disease germs, "dirty" comes to signify material, however it may appear, which is likely to carry more than an ordinary dose of disease germs.

It has been said that two Chinese and our practice of carrying more or less soiled handkerchiefs in our pockets is most offensive to their ideas of cleanliness. We, on the other hand, are rather proud of the practice. "I am informed," says a writer, "that I am informed, to carry a number of paper napkins, which are thrown away after wiping lips or nose."

Except for the half-eliminate has been away of such papers, their practice is undoubtedly cleaner than ours. Indeed, in the most approved tuberculosis sanatoria, the Chinese method is employed, except that the soiled handkerchiefs are placed in a paper bag and destroyed by fire, hot and cold.

The "common handkerchief" must take its place in the discard with the "common drinking cup" and the "common paper napkin." As a carrier of disease it is much more important than either of the latter two. While the state can and does prohibit the use of common towels and drinking glasses, it can not be expected to regulate intimate details of personal and family toilet.

This gives an excellent illustration of the impossibility in many instances of regulating personal and public health by law. It also illustrates the need of personal information and the safeguard that knowledge furnishes. Thinking people who will take the pains to understand the few primary principles which underlie disease spread and prevention.

Thompson-Ramsey.

The marriage of Miss Ethel Ramsey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Ramsey of Saratoga and Marion Thompson son of Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Thompson of this city, took place at the home of the bride's parents, Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock, Rev. L. E. Beckham performing the ceremony. The bride was attended by Miss Daisy Thompson, sister of the groom and Charles Ramsey, brother of the bride. Following the ceremony a wedding dinner was served, only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties being present.

Only A Dad.

Only a dad with a first face coming home from the daily race. Bringing little of gold or fame To show how well he has played the game.

But glint in his heart that his own reward Do see him come and to hear his voice!

Only a dad, of a brood of four, One of ten million men or more, Plodding along in the daily strife, Bearing the whips and scorns of life With never a whimper of pain or hate For the sake of those who at home await.

Only a dad, neither rich nor proud, Merely one of the surging crowd, Telling, striving, from day to day, Facing whatever may come his way; Silent, whenever the harsh condemn, And bearing it all for the love of them.

Only a dad, but he gives his all, To smooth the way for children small, Joins, with courage stern and grim, The deeds that his father did for him; This is the line that for him I pen, Only a dad, but the best of men.

A Belgian

By PAULINE BRADFORD
MACKIE

(Copyright, The Frank A. Munsey Co.)

All night Maurice Deaujon was possessed with the certainty that Jean was lying, wounded, in the open field. He knew the lad trusted him to come, so Deaujon tossed as a mother might and could scarcely wait for the dawn. He talked to Jean. The stars were pale.

"There, go, Jean," he reached for his boots—"so, Jean, keep up your courage."

He raised his flask and tasted of its contents: "So, Jean, a few drops, they put heart in a man."

He stuffed a loaf of bread into his knapsack.

"Now, a crumb, Jean—go!"

He gathered up gun and dressing for a wound and thrust it into his knapsack. "So, Jean, let us see Ah-h-h-h, that is bad, but we'll get you well. Let me tie on this bandage. They'll do better for you at the hospital, but this will serve till we get there."

He hung his knapsack over his back. "So, Jean, put your arms around my neck. Gently, gently. I'll not jar you. That's better, eh?" He laughed. "The uh-lans didn't get you, Jean?"

It was gray when he went down the road. People had their houses open, but the shop windows were closed. At the city gate an officer talking with a sentry recognized Maurice.

"Hello, Deaujon!" he called. "You have been promoted for bravery."

Deaujon nodded as a matter of course. He had fought like a demon to kill men; he must have yelled like a maniac; his throat was raw inside; he had risen to a kneeling position in the trenches to snatch a flag which had been shot away from Jean, and he had waved it high above his head to cover the retreat of his companions.

And then the uh-lans were on him again, but he was up and running with the flag, and he had escaped, somehow he had escaped. It was a miracle. He never doubted Jean's safety until the lad could not be found.

"Where are you going, Deaujon?" "For Jean," Deaujon answered.

"Valles, he is missing!" the officer asked. "Have you been through the hospitals?"

"He is not in them," Deaujon answered.

This delay tortured him. He knew he could make his search better before the sun was up, for the gleam of the bayonets had dazzled him yesterday, and from the field they would flash in his eyes again.

Deaujon pointed. "Valles can't be far," he added. "We were right in those trenches, just back of those bushes."

"Well, go on, then," said the officer; "but be cautious. Remember the wounded have been taken off the field. You won't find him alive."

"Alive," thought Deaujon impatiently; "no, not if this talking keeps up much longer!" He saluted and hurried away.

He stepped out into the field. He had known he should see the rifles and the bayonets first, but they did not flash upon his eyes now.

No; they were dull and gray like the sky. He gazed blankly into the zenith, his first instinct was to look away from the ground.

There was still a star shining; it was yellow and very faint. He met its gaze. It looked at him steadily, blinked, and went out. The thought of Jean gripped him, and he forced himself to look down again over the field.

There were spots on the bushes; thin, slow streaks (furrows) the ground; and the light increased those sluggish trickles, those splashes, were seen.

This was a shambles; the world a slaughterhouse.

All the panoply of war was gone; all that made it brilliant, all that glorified him, was gone. Why had he been promoted for bravery?

He was not brave.

His mind was confused; he must stop, he must be clear. There was a word which would help him if he could remember it.

He pressed his hand to his forehead, struggling for that word. Ah, he had it! Sure. He must be sane.

He strode firmly forward, looking neither to the right nor to the left, his gaze on those bushes just beyond the farther trench.

He heard low moans and cries, but he did not heed them.

Something moved in a heap of bodies. How dead men struggled! He passed on. There, out on a free space of ground, a dead Belgian was lying forward on his face.

Deaujon paused. Clutched in the man's hand was an arm. He stared. Then he saw the man's other arm and been shot off.

His heart jumped.

Could that slender fellow be Jean? He went forward and turned him over. When he saw the face of a stranger he began to laugh.

Now that the fellow did not prove to be Jean, he saw how comical it was. What did he expect to do with his arm. Run to the hospital with it to have it sewed on?

Deaujon pursued his search, chuckling.

The east grew rosy and a sweet, cool breeze blew against him. The day promised to be fine and clear. He was glad of that.

Jean always liked to lie flat on his back in an open field, staring up at the sky with eyes that were as blue. Mme. Valles was a German, and her eyes were like her son's.

She wept because her sister had boys in the German army. Her own husband was a Belgian, and her sympathy must go with him and Jean. Her son—was he not fighting the uh-lans as well as his father?

But women took life hard. He was sorry for women. He thought again of that fellow running off with his own arm before he was killed. There was a saying in the Bible, "As one whom his mother comforteth." The fellow had probably started to run home to his mother. She must be proud of her big boy.

He chuckled again.

He had forgotten that word which had impressed him so strongly—that word which would help him. He had forgotten it was important, but he had forgotten it again.

He hummed a tune—a little, old, Alsatian tune, he continued his search; the men whose faces he looked at made no impression on him. He only knew they were not Jean.

The sun flashed on the bayonets and sabers lying about; it was pretty as a sparkling sea.

He bent over a body. Some instinct made him rise and whirl about on his heel.

He was face to face with one of the uh-lans. The German was on foot. Each man was but a mirror of the other, so identical were their expressions; each had believed himself alone searching for a friend. They stared at each other; they turned; they ran in opposite directions as if pursued by demons.

The fight was out of both of them. Deaujon dropped his rifle as he ran. He was on his heels. He stumbled and fell and lay as if dead, then reached slyly for his rifle.

As his hand gripped it he realized that it must be another man's, for he had dropped his own.

He sat up and looked over the field. The enemy had disappeared. He turned his head, and there beside him lay Jean. It was Jean's rifle he held. He knew by the smile on Jean's face that the lad was dead.

Only dead men were happy like that; that is, the right sort of dead men, not the kind who struggled to get back to life.

Jean's blue eyes looked straight up into the sky.

Deaujon touched the boy's face. It was still warm. Then he knew that pale star which blinked at him and went out was a signal from Jean. He wished he could lie down beside him, but he had promised to return.

He had been promoted for bravery, this Deaujon. Who was the fellow? Deaujon, Deaujon, Deaujon. He must find Deaujon again.

He lifted Jean on his back and started homeward. It was strange that he was carrying Jean's rifle instead of his own.

It was a message that he must fight for them both. He was grim but exultant as he strode on. Where he had asked, "Have you been through the hospitals?"

"He is not in them," Deaujon answered.

This delay tortured him. He knew he could make his search better before the sun was up, for the gleam of the bayonets had dazzled him yesterday, and from the field they would flash in his eyes again.

Deaujon pointed. "Valles can't be far," he added. "We were right in those trenches, just back of those bushes."

Deaujon pointed. "Valles can't be far," he added. "We were right in those trenches, just back of those bushes."

"and I think the man who brought him is ill. He looks so white!"

"Yes, mademoiselle," answered Marie. Her hand shook as she kept pouring the coffee into the saucer instead of the cup.

"Here," said Miss Dewey, "I will attend to that." She seized the coffee pot and poured the coffee with a steady hand. "Now you bring a basin of warm water to wash his feet. They are bleeding and his stockings are cut in shreds."

"Yes, mademoiselle," answered Marie. "Please tell me—where is Jean?"

"His mother has him in her room. She has shut the door. Hurry with that basin, Marie," Miss Dewey went back to Deaujon. "Try to take a little of this coffee. It will do you good."

Deaujon lifted his heavy eyes to her face. "Thank you."

Marie came hurrying in with towels and a basin of water and kneeling down, peeled off the ragged stockings with tender fingers. She was young and dark and richly colored.

Suddenly she pressed Deaujon's bare feet to her bosom, sobbing, while she murmured: "My Jean, my Jean!"

She was to have married Jean Valles in the autumn.

Deaujon's brows contracted with pity. "Poor Marie!" he said. "Poor Marie!" His mind seemed entirely clear again.

The coffee helped him. He watched her as she sat back on her heels, letting his feet drop into her lap and looking up pitifully at him.

"Now, I shall have no husband," he saw, her eyes, little, drooping, moist, she was in her eyes.

It was more than grief for Jean. It was desolation come upon her. The issues of life were cut off. She would have no husband, no children. Why was she left a woman?

This was what war did for women! Deaujon spoke with difficulty, for his throat was tired. "Marie, if I live I will return and be your husband."

When she saw the kindness on his face she bent forward and laid her face against his breast, sobbing. He patted her shoulder until she grew quiet. Then he said: "Now, I must be going."

Miss Dewey was crying, too. She ran out to get him another cup of coffee. "What a good man!" she thought.

Marie knelt and dried his feet and put a pair of clean stockings on him. They were Papa Valles', as were also the boots, she brought. Papa Valles had gone to the war, too; and he was a big man like Deaujon, not slight like Jean. Jean was so pretty—like a girl. Her scars felt more gently.

Deaujon pulled on the boots. He rose and shook hands with Miss Dewey. "Good-by," he said. "When you return to your own country remember us."

She stood on the steps of the hotel, while Marie followed him to the road. "Wait," he said; "I was forgetting something."

He thrust his hand into his pocket and drew forth a big key and gave it to Marie. "It is the key to my shop. If I do not come back all is yours."

She took it as a child might. "Yes," she kept her eyes fixed wistfully on Deaujon's face.

"Good-by," he said, and bent to kiss her cheek; then suddenly drew her into his arms and kissed her mouth.

"Good-by, my wife!"

He kissed and cursed freely through his voice once more. That kiss—so fresh, so sweet—had revived him. It was as though Marie had become a stranger with whom he had fallen in love at first sight.

Their love sprang new born from this moment; it had no past. He went off down the road with a swinging step, his shoulders squared. The good good meant well by man. His hand must be over this somehow—yes—over it all.

"Where is his shop, Marie?" asked Miss Dewey.

"The fourth one down that side, mademoiselle," answered Marie.

"Oh, that beautiful lace shop!" Miss Dewey exclaimed. "There are some wonderful rosepieces in the window. I noticed them the first day I was in town. So he is a lace-maker."

"Yes, mademoiselle."

Deaujon reached the top of the road. He turned and waved his cap. Then he disappeared down the hill.

"He is gone," said Marie. She clasped her hands on her breast. "Think, mademoiselle, how one hour can bring me two sorrows. It is war!"

Had Given It.

Here is a good story of a popular English actor. He had gone to give an entertainment at the house of a new friend, and there was a dinner on.

When he came into the city again no one offered to help him, for Deaujon was a giant in strength and he bore Jean as though he had been a girl.

He climbed the road and turned into a small hotel.

Mme. Valles sat at the table with the one guest left in the hotel; she was having an extra cup of coffee with her and they were talking about the war.

Deaujon's figure filled the doorway and his shadow fell across the two women.

Mme. Valles raised her hands. She was going to cry out, but somehow she did not. Instead she managed to get to a door; it opened into her bedroom.

"Put him here, Maurice. Can you get a doctor?"

Deaujon laid Jean down on his mother's bed. He patted Mme. Valles' cheek so softly in his pity.

"No, Jean does not need a doctor, Mama Valles."

He went out, closing the door on the two. There was a stranger in the dining room, and he remembered Mme. Valles did not like curious eyes.

He sat down in the first chair he reached, exhausted.

The guest in the hotel was an American—Miss Dewey. She had expected to join friends in Berlin. She kept saying to herself that she had never expected this war when she went abroad.

When she saw Deaujon's paler she ran to the kitchen and called Marie, the young girl who assisted Mme. Valles as a kind of underhousekeeper, to bring her coffee at once.

"They have brought home Knepper, Valles' son dead," she exclaimed.

Cured.

So, to locate the ring, X-ray photographs had to be resorted to.

Minnie's side was marked off into seven sections, and seven X-ray plates were marked to correspond with numbers painted on her side. One after another, the photographs were made of her interior to find the exact position of the ring.

It was disclosed itself. It had become firmly lodged in the throat of the elephant. She could not cough it up, nor would it go down. A veterinary surgeon was summoned, and he probed the animal's throat for the ring. The valuable gem was soon recovered, and Minnie was none the worse for her novel experience.

AT THE FRONTIER

"Well, he can keep on following us," said Miss Deaujon. "There's no law against it, I suppose—not over here."

The tea, the music, even the clothes she wore, were all well calculated to soothe a feminine heart—especially one that could not have been more than twenty years old; but, as she gazed out over the terrace of Armonville, with an elaborate presence of mind, she was a dangerous sparkle in Miss Deaujon's eye.

Her mother, a personification of American dollars and well preserved youth, looked at her with an indulgent smile.

"His little is perfectly good," she purred. "I looked it up—in the manach de Götting, where only royal and—"

"Look out! He's coming over," said Miss Deaujon.

It had required no very keen vision on the part of Prince Frederick von Hohenstaufen to see the Deaujons, mother and daughter. An omniscient head waiter, in the first place, with an eye to a ten-franc tip, had placed them at a table where all might see.

So Miss Deaujon thought. The prince recovered it for her with a little laugh just as the music, with a succession of rippling scales suggestive of a flight of butterflies, went up into the air and was silent.

Silent, also, for most of the time were Mrs. Deaujon and her daughter as they drove home a little later through the high-arched allees of the Bois. They were stopping at the Bristol, the German spas, the most likely.

And when both willing to pretend that it was this approaching departure from Paris that kept them a little restrained, a little blue.

Finally Mrs. Deaujon spoke. "Don't you think you're a bit brutal with him, Beth? Young Germans have been known to kill themselves—"

"Oh, he'll show up again," said Elizabeth.

Elizabeth, like a pond overstocked with goldfish—filled with the rich and idle from the four quarters of the world. Came the end of Grand Prix week, and it was as though some mighty hand had opened all the sluices of the pond. The goldfish scattered.

The Deaujons lingered longer in Paris than they had expected—a matter of new gowns and hats and of the other goldfish, to the German.

But all there was no sign of Prince Frederick von Hohenstaufen. It troubled them both a little secretly. He wasn't acting in accordance with form. Generally when an impoverished prince once fixes his attention on a dazzling belle like Elizabeth Deaujon—handsome, educated, immeasurably rich in her own right—he becomes a different person.

So they both thought. They were not without experience. But they said nothing about it. Not until one night. It was the night that followed a hideous day. From early morning they had been crowded with strangers whom they feared and distrusted in the tiny, suffocating compartment of a third-class railway carriage. All day the train had crawled and stopped, then crawled again, like a wounded woman, while other trains rushed by with lordly authority. Soldiers, helmeted, brusque, impersonal, had jerked the door of the compartment open at times, had stared and talked among themselves, but had answered no questions.

Even more lugubrious was the deepening night. As they began to rain, the day, as though the wounded woman was completely exhausted, the train came to a halt and moved no more. There was another hour of stifling misery, then once more the door was jerked open and there came the order in the clipped, military German of Prussia:

"All passengers get down!"

It was almost panic at the shuddering civility—women and children, Dutch, Belgian, French, English, American—clambered out; but information somehow got about that here they were to remain until mobilization was complete, that there was a hotel in the neighborhood that was to be their temporary prison.

"And what is the name of the place?" Elizabeth asked a man in a blue uniform, with his wife and four children, who had been their climatic throughout the day.

Said the Belgian: "This is Hohenstaufen!"

A moment later she and her mother were leaning against each other for mutual support.

Very stiff and straight in a new uniform, surrounded by officers who were showing a respectful respect, there stood a man under the yellow shimmer of the station light some one whom they both had instantly recognized—Prince Frederick himself. Almost at the same instant he saw them, started toward them.

"Ah, Mrs. Deaujon; again! Permit me to salute you."

He took the tips of her fingers, bent forward from the hips without flexing his knees.

"Ah, Miss Elizabeth!"

He repeated the salute. But his ridiculously short hair was now concealed by a helmet which hadn't been displaced.

"I regret," he said, as he straightened up, "that you have been made to suffer. But while you are in Hohenstaufen you will, at least, be my guests."

exclaims one of them. "Shades of the Princes of Croch Clan! Why, the Hogans are descendants of Irish kings. Croch was the second son of Lord of the one hundred and third king of Thomond Stem, and was the ancestor of the family. Croch Clan of which they were chiefs, was a territory in the principality of Ormond. The Hogans had a fortified residence at Arderony, a parish in the barony of Lower Arderony, and they had a name at Ballylusky, in the same territory. That was in ancient times."

done her the honor—"Mrs. Deaujon began. "Perhaps I should have spoken first to you," said the prince, talking so idly. "But I said. This is America, when there must not be too much formality. Besides, I was crazy—crazy with love—as I have been ever since first I looked at her."

"No scene, please," cautioned Elizabeth steadily. The band played louder. Her remark drew blood apparently.

"It is true that I have debts," the prince went on; "but the debts of my ancestors. I pay interest on them. No one expects more than that. They are like state debts—what you call national debt. A national debt is never paid. But why mention such things? It is you I love. You I followed again back to Europe."

"Will you have cream or lemon?" asked Elizabeth, suddenly remembering the tea things.

"So why—why—will you not have me?"

"Shall I go over it all once more?" asked Elizabeth, smiling but cruel. "I've seen enough of these international marriages to make me sick. If I ever marry—which I doubt—I'll marry an American. I'll marry a man who can take care of me, just as I thought I didn't have a cent in the world; one who will take care of me, and I'll take care of him by my own efforts. Since you owe so much, by your own admission, why don't you work and—"

"Elizabeth!"

Mrs. Deaujon was scandalized, as she often was by this ultra-modern darning of hers; but the prince was listening, sober, intent.

"I can't work, the way you mean," said Prince Frederick with bated breath. "I'm a Hohenstaufen. I belong to the empire. If it were not for that, there is nothing in the world I wouldn't do to show you—show you how I love you. Even now, could I do so with honor, I'd blow out my brains—"

"I've dropped my fan," said Mrs. Deaujon.

The prince recovered it for her with a little laugh just as the music, with a succession of rippling scales suggestive of a flight of butterflies, went up into the air and was silent.

Silent, also, for most of the time were Mrs. Deaujon and her daughter as they drove home a little later through the high-arched allees of the Bois. They were stopping at the Bristol, the German spas, the most likely.

Luxembourg.

Not much has been heard from Luxembourg since the commencement of the European war. Luxembourg, it will be remembered, took a position exactly opposite to that taken by Belgium when the German forces demanded a passage through its territory. It did not oppose, but permitted the march on the ground that the country would not suffer and that all losses would be repaid. It now appears that Luxembourg is suffering and suffering bitterly. It is in the same plight as Belgium and the other made an appeal to the Belgian relief committee. It only shows that war is war and suffering is inevitable—St. Louis Times

New Loves for Old

By Victor Radcliffe

Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman

Face to face for the first time in fifteen years with his almost forgotten early love, Mr. Archibald Newton raised his hat politely and his face became pleasant. The lady shook hands with him and smiled with a genuine greeting for an old-time friend.

"A happy surprise," remarked Archibald. "Some changes since you and I last met. Married, of course?"

"With two children," and the lady's face saddened as she murmured softly—"widow."

"Widow?" explained Archibald. "Two children also—girls."

"And I have two boys," supplemented Mrs. Burton. "You do not live here, surely?"

"But I do," replied he, with a rather proud wave of his hand, including within its scope fair acres enclosed by the fence against which he had been leaning.

"How strange!" observed Mrs. Burton, with a slight flutter in her voice. "I have just bought the place adjoining."

"You don't say so?" exclaimed Mr. Newton. "Then we shall be neighbors."

"And friends, I hope, as we always were," added his companion. "Those dear old days?" and she lowered her eyes and he sighed.

"I declare! Mary has made a fine looking woman," commented Archibald as they parted for the time being.

"I always thought Archibald handsome," Mrs. Burton commented with herself. "He's more so than ever now."

And Archibald smiled with warmth and Mrs. Burton smiled, and it brightened the moment for both in a pleasing way.

In about a week the Burtons moved into their new home. Mrs. Burton explained that she had seen it advertised and had purchased it on the recommendation of a lawyer friend. She had never dreamed of the good fortune of getting next door to a helpful accommodating old friend.

It was when for the first time Archibald got sight of the two boys that he seemed to get a new life impulse. They were bright, lively, up-to-date, arching, eight and ten years old respectively. Such lads! It made Archibald chuckle over his own early boyhood as he watched them up to all kinds of fun and mischief.

They climbed trees to the topmost branch. They hitched up the cow to a dog cart and had a runaway. They

"What I never dreamed of," he said. "No, no, but I was mad with drink and down on Mr. Newton for discharging me from his service."

"What had I to do with that?" asked the lady.

"Well, I knew it would hurt him worse to have you suffer than himself."

"I don't understand."

"Because—because I was in love with you!" blurted out the man.

Mrs. Burton looked at Archibald. Both blushed. The officer and his prisoner departed. Archibald crossed over to the woman's chair.

"Mary," he said softly, "we don't need two houses. One will do, if—"

"Oh, my!" fluttered Mrs. Burton. "If we bring up the boys and girls under one roof. Makes me happy, Mary," and Archibald was eloquent and earnest as a young lover of twenty-one.

"I wish I could," responded Mrs. Burton—"as happy as I am myself after what that man said."

"It's true, Mary—every word of it!" declared the ardent swain thrillingly. And then he kissed her, just as he had in the far past when she was a blushing girl of sixteen.

"Mullin" in Fiction.

Latter-day American novel tellers, most of them, seem to be in conspiracy to "make the world better," to "touch the heart," to "make you forget all your troubles," to "exalt life and love," to be "a sunshine-maker." These intentions are so unflattering, and the stress laid on "clean living" is so insistent, that one is forced to ask one's self whether the practice and theory of living in America are not antagonistic; whether the exaggerated sentimental appeal may not denote thinness of real emotion, and the persistent absorption of the moral issue an uneasy self-distraction; if the moral issue as a whole is to be as ridiculous as the charge the great American people with being less honest with themselves than are those of other nations as it would be to count that "freedom of freedom" there is less inner freedom than elsewhere.

But the latter-day American novel often leaves one with an uneasy idea that the weight and momentum of American civilization are rolling out of the past of human nature very flat and are stamping it with machine-made patterns of too common an order.—The Atlantic.

Bright Policemen.

During the early period of the work on the Panama canal many persons were injured by jumping on and off trains in motion on the Panama railroad. There were on the zone police force many West Indians, who were trained and capable men, but incurably literal. An order was issued to the force to arrest any person found jumping on or off a train in motion, and the next day two West Indian policemen were brought to a police station, a white man who was struggling fiercely to break away from them.

"What have you arrested him for?" asked the police sergeant who was on duty.

"For jumping on and off the rear of a train, sah," one of the policemen replied.

"The blamed fools!" cried the arrested man. "I'm the bravest man!"

First Shall Be Last.

Miss Gushington—I think your novel has a perfect ending, Mr. Scribbler.

Scribbler—How do you like the opening chapter?

Miss Gushington—Oh, I have not come to that yet!—Judge.

Fires From Carelessness.

As a sensible contribution to the literature of the cigarette as a starter of fires, we and little, let us recommend the following, from the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin: "The announcement that a recent $700,000 fire was due to the dropping of a cigarette into a rubbish heap is not so severe a condemnation of the despised 'cotton' as of the man who smoked it. It is quite likely that the man who is careless enough to drop a lighted cigarette where it may cause a fire would get intoxicated and had a runaway.

The boys were with him and both were slightly bruised. This angered Archibald. He discharged the man.

"I'll get even with you!" threatened the latter.

"Don't show your face around here again," ordered Archibald.

"Yah!" retorted the insolent fellow. "Mighty loving about those two mischievous brats, ain't yer? Huh! guess it's the mother you're after."

"You watched 'em well!" raved Archibald, and made for the man, but the latter darted away and back to his cups at the village tavern.

A week later one morning the younger of the boys started Archibald with a quick alarming cry.

"Fire—see, it's our house!" They all ran for the Burton home. The girls were outside on the lawn, weeping by Mrs. Burton.

"Where—she?" shouted Archibald frantically.

"She went back to get the bird you gave her," replied one of the little misses.

"Why, she's hemmed in with the flames!" cried Archibald.

It was fortunate that he entered the burning house, for in one of the upper rooms he stumbled across Mrs. Burton. She had fainted away. He lifted her in his arms. She partially recovered sensibility. Her arms encircled his neck. He felt quite the hero as he got her safely out of the house.

"The house was set on fire, Archibald," declared Mrs. Burton that evening. "They were all housed comfortably now in the Newton home. The flames started in the cellar where no one had been for two days."

The village marshal was advised. He started a still hunt for the incendiary.

Archibald and Mrs. Burton were discussing their plans for rebuilding the next evening when the marshal appeared. The dismissed hired man was in his charge.

"What shall I do with him?" inquired the marshal.

Archibald hesitated. It seemed so nice and homelike to see Mrs. Burton under his roof that he almost forgave the trouble.

"Make him sign the pledge and send him away. I don't want to start any man on the way to the penitentiary," he said.

"But why did he set fire to my house?" inquired Mrs. Burton in an injured tone.

"Revenge, ma'am," muttered the incendiary.

"Why, I never harmed you."

"No, ma'am, but I was mad with drink and down on Mr. Newton for discharging me from his service."

"What had I to do with that?" asked the lady.

"Well, I knew it would hurt him worse to have you suffer than himself."

"I don't understand."

"Because—because I was in love with you!" blurted out the man.

Mrs. Burton looked at Archibald. Both blushed. The officer and his prisoner departed. Archibald crossed over to the woman's chair.

"Mary," he said softly, "we don't need two houses. One will do, if—"

"Oh, my!" fluttered Mrs. Burton. "If we bring up the boys and girls under one roof. Makes me happy, Mary," and Archibald was eloquent and earnest as a young lover of twenty-one.

"I wish I could," responded Mrs. Burton—"as happy as I am myself after what that man said."

"It's true, Mary—every word of it!" declared the ardent swain thrillingly. And then he kissed her, just as he had in the far past when she was a blushing girl of sixteen.

"Mullin" in Fiction.

Latter-day American novel tellers, most of them, seem to be in conspiracy to "make the world better," to "touch the heart," to "make you forget all your troubles," to "exalt life and love," to be "a sunshine-maker." These intentions are so unflattering, and the stress laid on "clean living" is so insistent, that one is forced to ask one's self whether the practice and theory of living in America are not antagonistic; whether the exaggerated sentimental appeal may not denote thinness of real emotion, and the persistent absorption of the moral issue an uneasy self-distraction; if the moral issue as a whole is to be as ridiculous as the charge the great American people with being less honest with themselves than are those of other nations as it would be to count that "freedom of freedom" there is less inner freedom than elsewhere.

But the latter-day American novel often leaves one with an uneasy idea that the weight and momentum of American civilization are rolling out of the past of human nature very flat and are stamping it with machine-made patterns of too common an order.—The Atlantic.

Bright Policemen.

During the early period of the work on the Panama canal many persons were injured by jumping on and off trains in motion on the Panama railroad. There were on the zone police force many West Indians, who were trained and capable men, but incurably literal. An order was issued to the force to arrest any person found jumping on or off a train in motion, and the next day two West Indian policemen were brought to a police station, a white man who was struggling fiercely to break away from them.

"What have you arrested him for?" asked the police sergeant who was on duty.

"For jumping on and off the rear of a train, sah," one of the policemen replied.

"The blamed fools!" cried the arrested man. "I'm the bravest man!"

First Shall Be Last.

Miss Gushington—I think your novel has a perfect ending, Mr. Scribbler.

Scribbler—How do you like the opening chapter?

Miss Gushington—Oh, I have not come to that yet!—Judge.

Fires From Carelessness.

As a sensible contribution to the literature of the cigarette as a starter of fires, we and little, let us recommend the following, from the Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin: "The announcement that a recent $700,000 fire was due to the dropping of a cigarette into a rubbish heap is not so severe a condemnation of the despised 'cotton' as of the man who smoked it. It is quite likely that the man who is careless enough to drop a lighted cigarette where it may cause a fire would get intoxicated and had a runaway.

The boys were with him and both were slightly bruised. This angered Archibald. He discharged the man.

"I'll get even with you!" threatened the latter.

"Don't show your face around here again," ordered Archibald.

"Yah!" retorted the insolent fellow. "Mighty loving about those two mischievous brats, ain't yer? Huh! guess it's the mother you're after."

"You watched 'em well!" raved Archibald, and made for the man, but the latter darted away and back to his cups at the village tavern.

A week later one morning the younger of the boys started Archibald with a quick alarming cry.

"Fire—see, it's our house!" They all ran for the Burton home. The girls were outside on the lawn, weeping by Mrs. Burton.

"Where—she?" shouted Archibald frantically.

"She went back to get the bird you gave her," replied one of the little misses.

"Why, she's hemmed in with the flames!" cried Archibald.

It was fortunate that he entered the burning house, for in one of the upper rooms he stumbled across Mrs. Burton. She had fainted away. He lifted her in his arms. She partially recovered sensibility. Her arms encircled his neck. He felt quite the hero as he got her safely out of the house.

"The house was set on fire, Archibald," declared Mrs. Burton that evening. "They were all housed comfortably now in the Newton home. The flames started in the cellar where no one had been for two days."

The village marshal was advised. He started a still hunt for the incendiary.

Archibald and Mrs. Burton were discussing their plans for rebuilding the next evening when the marshal appeared. The dismissed hired man was in his charge.

"What shall I do with him?" inquired the marshal.

Archibald hesitated. It seemed so nice and homelike to see Mrs. Burton under his roof that he almost forgave the trouble.

"Make him sign the pledge and send him away. I don't want to start any man on the way to the penitentiary," he said.

"But why did he set fire to my house?" inquired Mrs. Burton in an injured tone.

Moving pictures of German activities in the European war, giving the German side of the great conflict, are to be seen at Daly's Theatre, starting Wednesday April 14. The pictures are very interesting and are well worth a visit, not only from Germans and supporters of the German cause, but from others who are interested in the war. The pictures shown are views snapped by a photographer with the German army, and are of historical value. It was under the auspices of the NEW YORK STATE ZEITUNG that the films were brought to this country for exhibition. Every picture shows the doings of the German camp, field, on the march, and in man troops. The soldiers are seen in action.

THERE are many men whose builds are irregular—shorter, stouter, longer—for whom clothes made standard "patterns" would not fit. Abel & Podawiltz Co's great range of sizes provides good-fitting clothes for these.

NOT MUCH FLURRY IN CITY POLITICS

Election Day in Grand Rapids was about as quiet a proposition as it is possible to imagine. If the banks and saloons had not been closed there would have been nothing to indicate that an election was in progress. The lack of contest in most of the wards accounts for the small amount of interest taken and the small vote that was polled.

The only man running at large in the city was Frank W. Calkins for Justice, and he was elected without opposition. The election in the wards resulted as follows:

First Ward: Jacob Becker, Alderman; Lewis Schroeder, Supervisor.

Second Ward: H. E. Gaulke, Alderman; Peter McMiller, Supervisor.

Third Ward: W. C. Goughan, Alderman; F. G. Gilkey, Supervisor.

Fourth Ward: Herman Plinke, Alderman; W. E. Wheeler, Supervisor.

Fifth Ward: Jos. Lukatski, Alderman; Andrew King, Supervisor.

Sixth Ward: Max Witrock, Alderman; F. L. Rourke, Supervisor.

Seventh Ward: F. B. Hamon, Alderman; H. E. Nason, Supervisor.

Eighth Ward: J. J. Jeffrey, Alderman; B. H. Goggin, Supervisor.

138 DIE ON LINERS

110 PERSONS MISSING AFTER STEAMERS ARE TORPEDOED BY GERMAN SUBMARINES.

100 LOST ON THE FALABA

Twenty-Six Drowned When the Agulla Is Sent to Bottom—Tusons Send Missile Into Ship Before Bats Are Launched.

London, March 31.—Reports officially confirmed by the admiralty state that two British liners have been torpedoed and sunk by German submarines and a Dutch steamer sent to the bottom in a German mine field. Of the passengers and crew of the two liners 138 persons are missing. The crew of the Dutch steamer was saved. One of the German raiders was recognized as the U-28.

The Falaba, carrying 140 passengers, was torpedoed and sunk off Milfordhaven, the admiralty announced on Monday. She is the first big passenger liner to fall victim to German submarine attacks.

Dispatches to her owners indicated that the death list of the Falaba liner may amount to about 100, including more than forty passengers. A telegram from Cardiff said that 62 first-class and 34 second-class passengers have been saved and that nearly fifty more passengers. Only forty-six members of the Falaba's crew of nearly 120 have been landed at Cardiff.

Several of the liner's crew were killed by the explosion that wrecked her engine-room. It is now believed that other boatsloads of passengers and crew were thrown into the water by the capsizing of their boats and went to the bottom.

Thirteen men of the crew of the Liverpool steamer Agulla were killed or drowned when the Agulla was torpedoed off Bishop Islands, according to a dispatch received here from Plymouth.

The submarine commander gave the crew four minutes in which to leave the ship, but shot a torpedo while the boats were being put over the sides. The chief engineer and the boatswain were instantly killed by the explosion and 11 others were killed outright or were thrown into the water and drowned.

The Falaba left Liverpool on Saturday for the west coast of Africa. Besides her 140 passengers she carried a crew of 120 men. Her officers state that when the German submarine appeared it whistled thrice as a signal for the steamer to prepare her lifeboats, but that before this could be done a torpedo struck the ship near the engine-room and the liner was swamped. Many persons aboard the vessel were thrown into the sea, where they struggled while the submarine circled about. A fishing boat saved many of the passengers and crew. Captain Davis of the liner was picked up dead.

The German government has not given the state department any intimation as to the course it will pursue. The German ambassador here, however, has expressed the opinion unofficially that the case will be settled without difficulty.

BRITISH STEAMER IS SUNK

English Merchant Ship Is Destroyed in Kaiser's Favorite Hunting Ground.

London, March 29.—Within four hours after admiralty officials had declared that Germany's submarine losses would result in an abandonment of the undersea warfare, an English shipping news reached here of the destruction of another British merchant ship in the English channel, favorite hunting ground of the Kaiser's submarines. The latest victim of submarine campaign in the "breed war" was the British steamer Delmar, a vessel of 2,211 tons. She was torpedoed and sunk in the English channel Thursday afternoon by a German submarine. All the members of the crew were saved.

RUSSIA SEEKS PEACE?

COUNT WITTE IN BERLIN BEFORE HIS DEATH.

Reported to Have Been Envoy to the Kaiser to Discuss Terms—War Party Opposed.

Washington, March 30.—The state department has received authoritative information that Count Witte, ex-premier of Russia, was in Berlin negotiating peace with Germany prior to his sudden death.

The negotiation interrupted by the death of the great Russian peace statesman will be taken up anew by another representative of the czar. When this will be done is not known, but the Berlin government all along has realized that it is in the line of the great contest under way it can be only through the detachment of Russia from France and Great Britain. Indeed, the diplomatic plans of the German foreign office contemplate also the withdrawal of France from the war and consequent isolation of Great Britain.

The czar and Witte were for peace with Germany. The party of Grand Duke Nicholas is for a continuance of the war with the allies. This party is the military party and if its aims are thwarted there will be danger of a revolution in the great Slav empire and the overthrow of the present emperor.

Exactly what terms Germany was willing to offer Russia as the price of withdrawal from the struggle, representatives of the United States have not been able to ascertain. The Kaiser's government would agree to the reconstitution of the independent kingdom of Poland. Undoubtedly also it would aid Russia in acquiring free access to the Mediterranean by means of concessions by Turkey.

The Germans had everything to gain and nothing to lose by peace negotiations with Russia. If the negotiations were successful, then a great step toward German victory would be achieved.

ANSWER TO HARVESTER BRIEF

U. S. Says Company Is Unduly Restrictive of Competitive Conditions—Asks Decree Be Affirmed.

Washington, March 31.—The Harvester company is a combination of able competitors together, occupying a preponderant position in trade and commerce among the states in harvesting machines and other agricultural implements, and therefore, by its necessary effect unduly restricts competitive conditions in violation of the antitrust act.

The Harvester company is also a combination unduly restrictive of competitive conditions because formed with specific intent to monopolize.

These are the grounds on which Attorney-General Gregory in a brief filed on Monday, asked the United States Supreme court to affirm the decree of the federal court for the district of Minnesota, finding the International Harvester company a combination in restraint of trade and ordering it dissolved.

WAR COUNCIL HELD

GERMANY'S NEXT MOVE IS SUBJECT BEFORE LEADERS AT BERLIN.

VON DER GOLTZ SEES KAISER

Commander of Forces at Constantinople Reports on the Dardanelles—Tusons Tell of Capturing 4,000 Russians.

London, April 1.—Germany's next move in the military field—because some stroke either in the East or West is expected before the allies attempt their spring advance—is at present the chief subject of speculation and conjecture.

According to reports reaching here from Petrograd the German emperor is now at Berlin holding a war council with Field Marshal von der Goltz, the German military commander of Constantinople, and other leaders, and is planning a new campaign to offset the fall of Premysl and to meet the situation in the Dardanelles.

There has been nothing of an outstanding nature in either theater of the land operations since the Russian der of the Asiatic fortress. Fighting, but not decisive, is raging in the Carpathians and there has been a succession of battles in northern Poland in which both sides claim to have been victorious.

The official German statement of Tuesday asserts that 2,000 Russians were killed and 3,000 captured in an engagement at Krusopol. In the German occupation of Taurica were is claimed that 1,000 prisoners were taken. Russian attacks at other points are said to have been repulsed.

The latest statement from the Petrograd war office is that the German offensive movement in this region has been checked.

The Austrians admit the Russians have assumed a vigorous offensive in the Carpathians, but insist that their attacks have been repulsed.

One hundred and sixty thousand Germans have arrived in Austria, according to a Berlin cable to the London Post. These have been sent to Cracow and the Carpathians to help repel the Russians.

FACE GRAVE CHARGE

OFFICIALS OF VALECIA MILK COMPANY ARE ACCUSED OF EMBEZZLEMENT.

BANK MAKES A COMPLAINT

Arrests Follow Appointment of Receiver for Concern With Liabilities and Assets Near Half Million.

Madison.—M. A. Fee and Charles F. Christensen, president and secretary respectively of the Valecia Condensed Milk company of Madison, which was placed in the hands of a receiver, were arrested on a charge of embezzling $3,378 from the State bank of Middleton.

They were arraigned in the Dane County Municipal court and their preliminary hearing set for April 12. Both were released on bail of $3,500 each.

The complaint was sworn to by W. F. Pierstorff, president of the Middleton bank. It is alleged that the receiver secured a loan of $3,378 from the Middleton bank, promising to turn over to the bank a check for that amount when they received pay for a carload of condensed milk shipped to the United States navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y. Instead of turning the check over to the bank, the accused men, it is charged, deposited it with the Madison bank to the credit of the Valecia company.

Mr. Bell reports that there has been a number of inquiries in the city for good farm horses of late, and that those who have household furniture or farm implements for sale should bring same in as they will be auctioned off at a very low cost.

Ed Krause will give a box of 50 cigars to the man bringing in the best row on fair day.

Don't forget that the brewery will give an eighth of beer to the farmer bringing in the most empty kegs.

The Holland Packing company will pay the highest market price for all fat stock.

JOHNSON & HILL CO.

Grand Rapids, Wisconsin.

Monthly Stock Fair.

The regular monthly stock fair will be held on the west side market square in this city on Tuesday, April 12th, and those who are interested in the matter should make a note of this fact.

Manager John Bell, who has been under the weather for a couple of weeks past, is on the job again, and he reports that the indications are good for a big fair this month. Most of the farmers at this time of the year are able to get away for a day and many of them have something to dispose of.

The Johnson & Hill company are offering 10 yards of muslin in the women who feature in the largest number of sale on fair day.

Mr. Bell reports that there has been a number of inquiries in the city for good farm horses of late, and that those who have household appliances or farm implements, for sale should bring same in as they will be auctioned off at a very low cost.

Ed. Krume will give a box of 54 cigars to the man bringing in the best cow on fair day.

Don't forget that the brewery will give an order of beer to the farmer bringing in the best milk cow.

The Rolland Packing company will pay the highest market price for all fat stock.

One day I met one of your patients whom you had cured and she told me to go to you and I am very thankful that I did. I hope this will help others to believe in you and I wish you success.

Yours very truly,
